Republicans reconsider nomination for U.S. House

By HEATHER BAKER

Universe Staff Writer

Some Republicans are having second thoughts about the prudence of their actions at Saturday's GOP convention and are urging one of the candidates they supported to step down.

At the convention, a faction of the Republican Party called "ultra-conservatives" by some of their fellow delegates, nominated a new face for Utah's 3rd District — Jeremy Friedbaum — to run against incumbent Chris Cannon.

Friedbaum shocked many at the convention by capturing 31.7 percent of the vote and forcing GOP primary elections this June. Cannon was expected to easily gain the 70 percent needed for a candidate to avoid the primaries.

Rod Fudge, a state central committee member from Utah County, said "the nomination of Jeremy Friedbaum was a disaster for the hard-right."

He explained that the ultra-conservatives vote against anyone who won't do 100 percent of what they think is right. So in this case they voted for Friedbaum to force Cannon into the primaries.

"They were just caught up in emotion," Fudge said.

Now that a primary election seems inevitable, Fudge said Cannon will draw out the faithful Republicans to the voting poles and make the turnout much larger than expected.

According to Fudge, the problem this creates for the ultra-conservative wing is that once these faithful Republicans are in the booth they will likely vote for incumbents Sheriff David Bateman and Commissioner David Gardner as well.

This will make the ultra-conservatives' controversial nominations for sheriff and commissioner — Richard Mack and Hans Anderson respectively — not have as good of a chance of being elected.

But others, like Friedbaum, said the sheriff and commissioner offices were big issues anyway, and the voters weren't going to just blow them off.

Rumors circulated Monday that Mack and Anderson had contacted Friedbaum to ask him to back out of the race. But when asked about this, Friedbaum said he was asked to back out, but not by Mack or Anderson. He said it was another delegate, whom he chose not to name.

Friedbaum said he wants to join forces with Mack and Anderson. But when Mack was asked to respond to this, he said he "would not join forces with anyone" and that it wasn't politically smart to do so.

Mack said he wouldn't endorse anyone for Congress since he didn't know Friedbaum very well and didn't have any complaints about Cannon.

Despite efforts to have him withdraw, Friedbaum said he still feels he needs to run for the election.

Friedbaum thought of the idea of running against Cannon in January. A letter read in his church by his leaders inspired him to get involved in politics. Friedbaum decided to pray about his decision and he said he felt it was the right thing to do.

As for Cannon, his staff said they're not too worried about the election and that they will run the campaign pretty low key.

Russians enjoy BYU visit, say we are a lot like them

A group of Russians visited BYU campus last week and shared their impressions and pointed out the cultural similarities.

"If I could tell the students here anything, it would be that we are the same," said Mikhail Bousiguin, a third-year student at the Academy of National Economy in Moscow. "We like to do the same things. We have the same hopes and dreams."

The group of 14 Russians consisted of students, professors and business people who found the people in Provo "tolerant and patient."

Semenova Katia, a Russian student, said, "Many people from different nations and cultures live and go to work together."

Bousiguin said he would like to attend BYU in the future and could adjust to the absence of beer and drugs, which he said are prevalent among Russian students.

"Everything here is very impressive — the people's attitudes and open-heartedness," Soboleva Olga, a Russian professor, said. "People are eager to help us on the street."

Group members said they had a positive experience at Temple Square. "

Russian visitors talk with a NewsNet editor last week in the Wilkinson Center. The group of students, professors and business people visited BYU to learn about U.S. business practices.

I always see Mormons in Moscow, and no one ever wants to talk to them," Krylov said. "Now that I have been to Temple Square and everyone there talked to me, I will go back to Moscow and talk to the missionaries. Maybe some day I will even be a part of this Mormon Church."

"Russia is good soil for the (LDS) Church because the young students are very open-minded and are looking for direction," Bousiguin said.

The group's visit to the United States has several purposes, according to trip organizer Gary Benson, a professor at the University of Wisconsin and a BYU alumnus. One is to expose them to U.S. business practices they can implement at home, he said.

Benson said he has participated in these privately funded exchange trips many times, but this is the first time he has brought a group to the West Coast.

Trial series begins for Provo bar

By NICK IZZO

Universe Staff Writer

The first in a long series of trials began Monday concerning the zoning ordinance of LeMar's Night Club on 210 W. Center in Provo.

"We need to get this case resolved as soon as possible," said 4th District Judge Howard Maetani, who is presiding over the case.

The issues at hand are not only important to those directly involved but also to the whole community, said David C. Dixon, assistant city attorney representing Provo throughout the trials.

The main focus of the trial is to determine if the new ordinance the city is trying to pass is constitutional, Dixon said.

The city ordinance includes requests to relocate LeMar's to a more appropriate location, prohibit alcohol services and enforce additional covering of the dancers from pasties to bikinis.

Maetani didn't make a judgment during Monday's trial, but he set the grounds for what facts and issues will actually be covered by both parties throughout the trial.

"I would just like to get this case to first base; a discovery of the true facts at hand. Then we'll move on to the official trial," Maetani said.

When questioned after the trial, defense attorney Andrew McCullough said that entertainment is protected by the First Amendment.

"Dancing is included as entertainment," he said.

For now, the semi-nude entertainment at the night club will continue. The dancers will remain in a room separated from the bar and continue to use pasties.

The night club will also be held responsible to see that no inappropriate behavior occurs.

"It's not an attention-getting issue. The focus of our case is to defend our legal rights," said Lemar Driggs, owner of LeMar's Night Club.

LeMar's has been in business for 15 years.

"Back in the late '80s there were dancers here at LeMar's, and nobody seemed to care then," said Jeff, a long-time customer at the night club.

"The only trouble we have had is a protest by city members outside the bar right before a city council meeting," said Pete Scott, a manager at LeMar's.

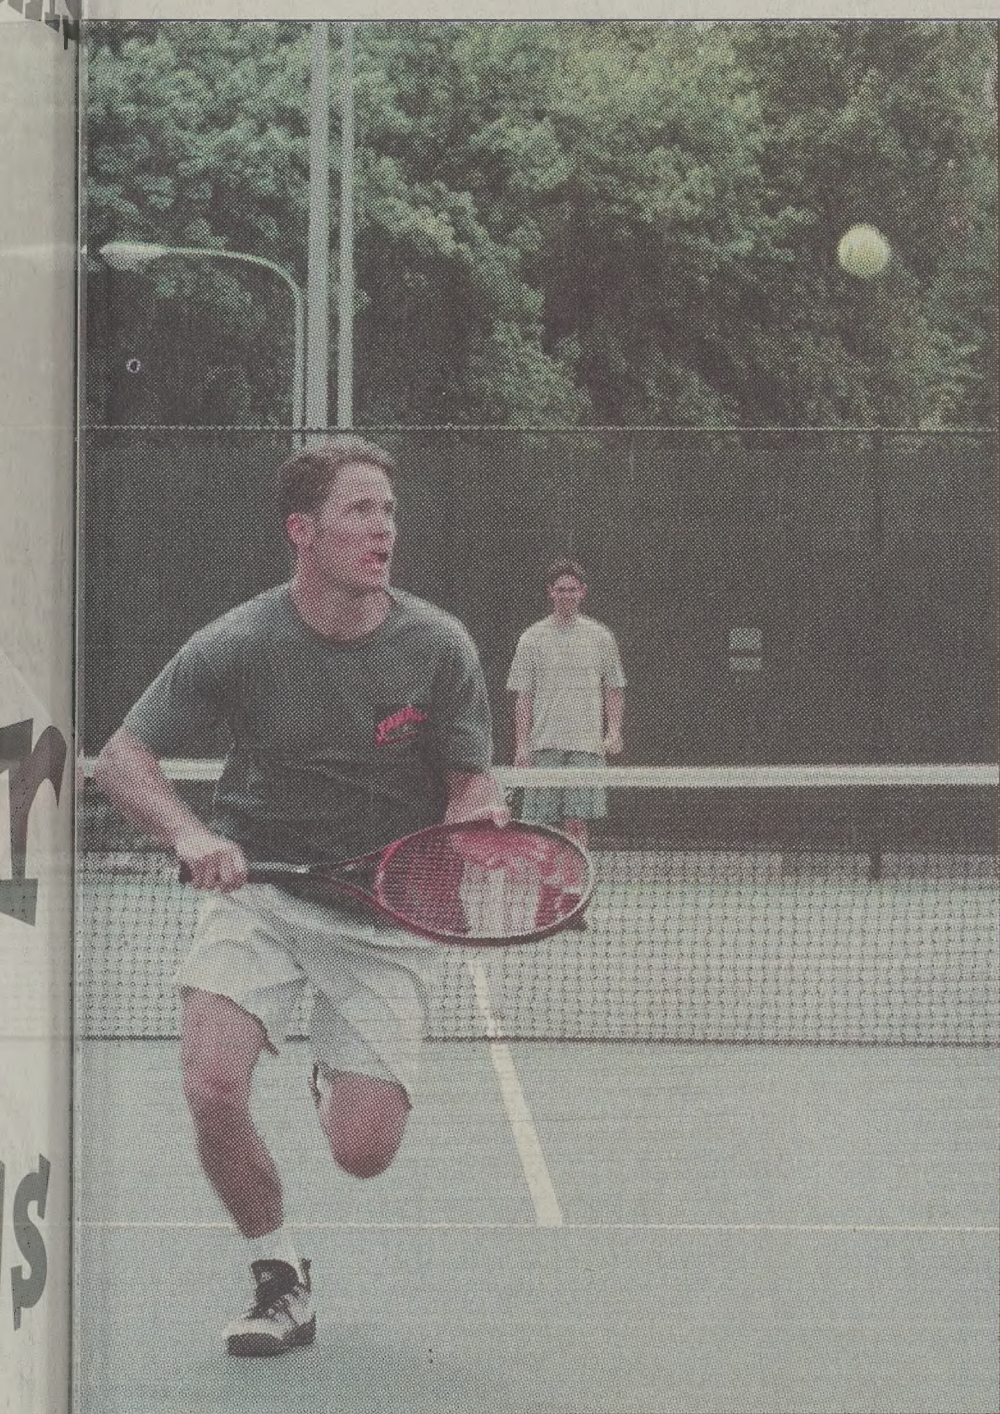

"I think it's more politics than anything," he said.

The trial will continue June 30, when Maetani will hear the status report of both sides.

Anderson, a graduate student in exercise physiology from Provo, runs after the ball as Hal Evans, a senior from California, majoring in advertising, looks on. Some students are charged the fees to use campus athletic facilities for part-time or visiting students.

Facility fees new to some

and continuing students about they need to pay a fee to use campus athletic facilities.

Guidelines were made 20 years ago by BYU's Health and Human Performance Services Department, many students are not aware of this fee.

Ballantyne, 22, a senior from Provo, majoring in zoology, said the policy is new to him and his summer, we played tennis on campus and all we needed to do was show them our ID cards. When we went to the BYU courts this year, we said we had to be full-time students to use the courts. I didn't know anything about it before.

Holley, chair of Health and Human Performance Services, said that only full-time students are allowed to use the facilities for free.

Continuing students and visiting students have recently graduated and for either a one-day or a semester pass. Non-students must be charged by a student to buy a pass.

A day guest pass costs $5. A semester pass for Spring Term costs $45. The cost for both Spring and Fall terms is $45.

Holley said why only full-time students are allowed free access, Holley said that students who pay full-tuition must pay an additional activity fee that is divided among the different colleges. Students who pay for a class pay directly into that fund without paying that additional fee. If they're enrolled in a physical education class, we don't receive that money."

Holley said the cost of the guest pass helps to cover the use and maintenance of the athletic facility.

Usually, the fee is a cleaning fee for uniforms and upkeep of the facility. My (Health and Human Performance Services) laundry bill was about $125,000, and the equipment was near $80,000."

Holley said that the cost is a fair price. The students have a choice to use the facilities, but they pay probably doesn't cover the expenses," Holley said.

The fee applies to all semesters, including fall and winter, and has been in effect for 20 years. Five years ago the cost for a semester pass was $35, but the price was raised to keep up with expenses rising three to four percent each year.

The facilities that require payment for part-time and continuing students are the weight room, the swimming pool and the racquetball, tennis, basketball, volleyball and wallyball courts.

Still, there are some students that feel they are not being treated as students because of the policy.

"We went to school full time last year and next year we'll be going full time. I'm very disappointed that even a continuing student can't use the courts (for free). I feel like we're being treated like we never went to school here," Ballantyne said.

Sariah Boucher, 20, a sophomore from Ontario, Canada, majoring in French teaching, said a distinction should be made between part-time and non-students. "Maybe they should have a discount for being a part-time student. You still have to pay, but just not as much."

Boucher said the semester pass is a good deal if someone will use it often enough, especially when compared to the costs of membership to local health and fitness clubs.

Holley said a national survey conducted a few years ago showed that other universities, such as the University of Texas and the University of California at Berkeley, also charge a one-time fee of $5 for the use of their athletics facilities.

When asked how the policy is enforced, Lindsay Robison, student employee of the Health and Human Performance Department, said that upon payment of tuition, all full-time students are in the computer system. When an ID card is swiped at the facility being used, the computer will tell the employee if the student is full time, part time or not currently enrolled. If someone buys a guest pass or a pass for the semester, their names are entered into the system for that period.

Occasionally special guest passes are available through the department when families want to use the facilities. Events like Homecoming and graduation are such times.

For more information regarding the facilities fee, contact Health and Human Performance Services at 378-3980.

Program changes at BYU

By ANTONIO LIMA
antonio@du2.byu.edu
Universe Staff Writer

Brigham Young University announced yesterday the Teaching English as a second language minor will be updated this fall to offer the English as a second language teaching endorsement. BYU's ESL-endorsement decision comes after the U.S. Office of Civil Rights' directive last year to increase services provided to Utahns with limited English proficiency.

The current minor focuses trainees on helping adults speak English, said Winston Egan, the chairman of teacher education. The Linguistics Department prepares educators to work with adults outside the public school system.

"Now, we're in the midst of creating a program to prepare teachers in the public school system to work with ESL children and youth," he said. The program is a collaborative venture between the Department of Linguistics and the Teacher Education Department.

"The new endorsement requirement from the state required us to change our program," said BYU's associate professor of linguistics, Ray Graham.

"For our students, because of these policy changes, when they look for a job, they will have an enhanced possibility of being hired. BYU graduates will have the qualified abilities to deal with the special needs of ESL children by adapting to their situation," Graham said.

"By completing their teaching major and coupling it with an ESL endorsement, a student becomes more marketable," Egan said. "They will be more prepared to work with the students of public schools. After all, there are a greater number of people whose primary language is not English."

Egan also said "schools are increasingly mirroring the diversity of society. The state of Utah has a tremendous need for trained teachers to instruct limited-English students and to help them develop their English skills."

"With the increase of immigration in the last decade, the demand for teachers with the ability to teach a subject in a different language is great," Graham said.

"We're in our infancy in terms of capacity," Egan said. "In the next three years, we hope to increase our capacity dramatically. Right now, we're unable to prepare everybody who wants to be prepared as an ESL teacher."

Resource constraints will allow the 65 students currently enrolled in the program to move through it this fall.

Compiled from staff and news service reports

Euro coin unites European currency

PESSAC, France — A French mint stamped out the first coins Monday for Europe's single currency, the euro, worth about $1.

On Jan. 1, nearly 300 million Europeans will begin using the euro for non-cash transactions in the 11 European Union nations that have agreed to use the currency. Bills and coins won't go into circulation until 2002.

Until 2002, the EU is to stamp 7.6 billion coins in addition to euro bills. The coins are to come in denominations of 1, 2, 5, 10, 20 and 50 cents, one euro and 2 euros.

Britain, Denmark and Sweden have so far opted to stay out of the euro, and Greece has yet to meet economic and financial restrictions to qualify.

Utah delivers highest birth rate in USA

OGDEN — Utah has the nation's highest birth rate. Mothers gave birth to a record 42,398 babies last year state figures show.

It's a homegrown dilemma. Last year, Utah gained more than twice as many people through birth than through people moving into the state, according to figures from the Governor's Office of Planning and Budget.

"You can't solve this problem .... You have to manage it," said Utah Gov. Mike Leavitt.

Kerrie Galloway, director of Planned Parenthood of Utah said nearly half of all births are unintended and Utahns could learn more about planning families.

Utah's fertility rate has been as high as 4.3. It now stands at 2.6 — the national average is 2.0.

If Utahns do nothing to manage the population surge, urban areas will continue to sprawl and problems are predicted for Utah.

"With more people you get more crime. With more people you get more cars. You get more pollution. These are serious problems," Leavitt said.

Park patrons happy to pay new fees

PAGE, Ariz. — The National Park Service doesn't have to apologize for charging higher fees to enter parks, hike trails, launch boats or listen to ranger talks.

A survey by the U.S. Forest Service found that more than 60 percent of forest visitors agreed that opportunities and services they found were at least equal to what they paid.

The reaction is a relief to NPS officials because fee hikes nationwide are expected to generate $140 million this year at national parks, representing 11 percent of the agency's entire operating budget.

Authorized by Congress in 1995, the demonstration fee program allows federal land managers — the Park Service, Bureau of Land Management, Forest Service and U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service — to test new or higher access fees at select recreation sites.

The attraction to the new fee program is having the money stay at the point of collection, rather than turning all fees over to the general treasury, which has been the historic practice.

Agency bosses are confident they will succeed in making the fees permanent.

Italians mad about number of deaths

SARNO, Italy — The hard mud in southern Italy yielded 16 more landslide victims Monday. Of the 135 bodies found, 113 were in Sarno, an agricultural town about 20 miles inland from Naples.

The death toll has angered citizens against government leaders for failing to advise them to leave their homes when the mud slides began.

"Why didn't our mayor warn us? This unnecessary loss of life makes me so angry," cried Maria Esposito, a 28-year-old mother of three who lost cousins and neighbors.

There were over 2,000 people left homeless, and rescue workers continue to dig through the hardened mud.

Eighty-three coffins moved in a funeral procession Sunday to a celebrated mass. Italian Premier Romano Prodi pledged that the government would work to help citizens recover from the tragedy and would work to create a future for the youth.

India conducts nuclear testing

Associated Press

NEW DELHI, India — India conducted three underground nuclear explosions today, and for the first time said clearly that it can build a nuclear weapon.

The move — the first nuclear tests by India since 1974 — ignited an uproar in Pakistan, India's long-standing rival, which vowed Monday to make its defenses "impregnable against any Indian threat, be it nuclear or conventional."

The United States criticized the tests announced by India's Hindu nationalist-led government, but Indian hawks were pleased, saying their country should acknowledge its nuclear capabilities.

"These tests have established that India has a proven capability for a weaponized nuclear program," Brajesh Mishra, a top aide to Prime Minister Atal Bihari Vajpayee, said.

Vajpayee said the explosions in the desert 330 miles southwest of New Delhi did not release radiation into the atmosphere.

"These were contained explosions," the prime minister said in a brief statement, adding that the units tested were a fission device, a low-yield device and a thermonuclear device.

"The United States is deeply disappointed by the decision of the government of India to conduct three nuclear tests," Clinton administration spokesman Mike McCurry said in Washington. "This runs counter to the effort the international community is making to promulgate a comprehensive ban on such testing."

Pakistani Foreign Minister Gohar Ayub stopped short today of saying that Pakistan would conduct a nuclear test of its own, but said "Pakistan reserves the right to take all appropriate measures for its security."

"The responsibility for dealing a death blow to the global efforts at nuclear non-proliferation rests squarely with India," he told the Senate in the Pakistani capital of Islamabad.

India, Pakistan and Israel are the three nations widely suspected of nuclear capability that have not joined the 1970 nuclear non-proliferation treaty, which is now observed by 185 countries.

"We have now to show that we have a counter regional bomb," Hamid Gul, the former head of Pakistan's secret service, said today. "All the Muslim countries are vulnerable to India's ambitions that are driving it toward the Gulf and central Asia."

Pratul Bidwai, an independent Indian weapons policy analyst who had urged India to abandon its pursuit of nuclear weapons, said a thermonuclear device was a sign India's program has progressed considerably since it tested a simpler fission device in 1974.

"China and Pakistan will regard us as a full-fledged nuclear adversary and so we will have two nuclear arms races - a small one with Pakistan and a big one with China," Bidwai said.

India gave no advance warnings of the nuclear tests, a spokesman for the International Atomic Energy Agency, David Kyd, said Monday in Vienna.

Vajpayee's Bharatiya Janata Party took control of the government in March saying that India would take all steps to protect its territory, including building nuclear weapons to counter what it called military adventurism by Pakistan.

Past governments have said India's nuclear program is only for peaceful purposes such as generating electricity.

High and high school students at Utah and surrounding areas at BYU for the annual Craftsman Fair to publicly display projects they made during the fair began Monday night as professionals judged the projects of several categories. The fair is also open to the public from 8 a.m. until 2 p.m. The awards will be announced at 2:30 p.m. in the University Theater.

Categories for this year's fair are woodworking, metals, architectural, machine tooling, plastics, glass, automotive, printing, pottery, and metal fabrication.

Mark Callister, associate dean of the College of Religious Education, will speak at 4:30 p.m. today at the de Jong Concert Hall.

Callister is drawing on professional experiences and other passages to demonstrate the importance of focusing on the blessings that come from waiting upon the Lord, Callister said.

Callister is a member of the General Conference Committee and has been in women's research, her church involvement permeates her life.

Callister said she was inspired to choose a scriptural text that would allow her to incorporate her research in women's health and nursing and both my personal and professional life in relation to women's health.

Steve Shumway of the Technology Education and Construction Management Department said people will be surprised at what is being accomplished by these students.

"You will be astounded at the quality of projects," Shumway said. "Recognition for the students is our top priority. We don't get anything out of it. We enjoy doing it."

More than 400 students from 20 to 30 high schools are competing this year. Some have come from as far away as Monument Valley, Monticello and Wyoming.

This year's competition is divided into two parts. First, the projects from the various categories are displayed in the ELWC Ballroom for the judges and the public.

Cody Black, a junior at Delta High School, is entering a gun cabinet he made this year. Black said that the students from Delta worked on their projects after school and on Saturdays.

The second part of the competition is the Challenge Cup—a problem-solving competition.

For this year's Challenge Cup, two students from each school will design a self-controlled, self-powered mechanism that will topple 10 Ping-Pong balls from small pedestals at predetermined locations.

Brent Larson, a machine tool and welding teacher from Delta High School, said the students at this competition are the best.

"These students are the top-notch kids throughout the schools. Every project is different and unique. Nearly all of (the projects) are an original design the students have been working on all year," Larson said.

There is no charge for admission, and the public is invited to attend.

Gershwin brought to life in 'Crazy'

By MELANIE ARMSTRONG
melanie@du2.byu.edu
Universe Staff Writer

It's got rhythm. It's got music. It's got guys and girls, heroes and villains, romance and gunfire. Who could ask for anything more?

Pioneer Theatre Company's "Crazy for You" features 20 Gershwin hits and has a tap-dancing hero, a sweet and spunky heroine, a black-caped villain and a chorus line of 10 dancing girls.

"Crazy for You" sets the songs of legendary songwriters George and Ira Gershwin to a script written by Ken Ludwig. The adaptation won the 1992 Tony Award for best new musical.

The play, set in the early 20th century, focuses on Bobby Child (Stacey Todd Holt), the son of a rich New York banker who aspires to dance in the Zangler Follies. When his mother sends him to Deadrock, Nev., to repossess a theater-turned-post office, he falls in love with Polly Baker (Nancy Anderson) and plans to save her father's theater.

While Holt and Anderson do a fine job with their leading roles, the supporting cast keeps the play alive and exciting. In a fire-engine red dress Bobby's estranged fiancée (Jessica Frankel) puts on a show-stopping rendition of "Naughty Baby." The duet of "What Causes Polly (Nancy Anderson) lets Lank (Robert Peterson) have it in the knee, as her father (Richard Mathews) tries to keep things under control in the Gershwin musical "Crazy for You." The show, which features old songs set to a new script, plays at Pioneer Theatre Company through Saturday.

That?" by Bobby and Zangler (Max Robinson) shows the humorous and musical capabilities of the actors.

The highlight of the show is the music. The audience leaves the theater humming Gershwin classics. Music director James Prigmore brings the lesser-known tunes to life and keeps toes tapping throughout the show.

The set design for Deadrock, by George Maxwell, brings out the lack of life in the slow-paced desert town. In contrast, the lively costumes of the dancers shine, thanks to the creative talent of designer David Kay Mickelsen.

Whether dancing in a chorus line or with washboards, the large cast moves together in flashy dance numbers, choreographed by Jim Christian. The town performs traditional Western bar fights which are choreographed in detail by David Boushey.

The charm of "Crazy for You" is the humor. The script is sprinkled with great one-liners and jabs at the old West. With a great script, excellent actors, enthusiastic dancers and lively Gershwin tunes, "Crazy for You" simply couldn't ask for anything more.

"Crazy for You" runs through Saturday at the Pioneer Memorial Theater. Tickets are $15 to $32.50. Call 581-6961 for information.

'Deep Impact' blockbuster thrills; suspense, appeal for everyone

By GEOFF SIMM
geoff@du2.byu.edu

Here's the situation: A comet is heading toward Earth and is going to wipe out everything. You are President Tom Beck (Morgan Freeman) and you choose a million people to be put into a series of underground caves called an "ark."

So goes the plot of Paramount Pictures' summer release "Deep Impact," which made $41.9 million on its opening weekend.

The story begins with an MSNBC reporter named Jenny Lerner (Tea Leoni) uncovering the story of an approaching comet. The comet is named after the kid who discovered it, Leo Beiderman (Elijah Wood). Surgeon Tanner (Robert Duvall) is sent with a team to try and blow up the comet.

To be honest, I'm not a big fan of "summer blockbusters" and was surprised by how much I enjoyed this movie. The acting was really good, and the script was well written, causing me to care about the characters (unlike other blockbusters such as "The Lost World").

This movie has a lot of subplots: A reporter trying to reconcile her feelings about her father. Leo and his friend Sarah trying to choose between each other and their families. And Tanner trying to help his team survive.

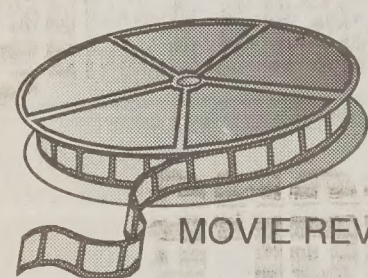

Usually, many subplots take away from the focus of a movie. In "Deep Impact," the subplots add to the suspense because you get to know the characters better and start to care about them more.

"Deep Impact" is a rare movie in that it will appeal to both men and women. I say this because my girlfriend liked it too, and we never agree on movies.

Men will, of course, be attracted by the special effects (and Tea Leoni). Women may not like the previews (and I realize I'm stereotyping here), but they will enjoy the humanity shown in the movie through the characters and storyline.

I should add a warning. This is NOT one of those Hollywood movies with one of those "happily ever after" endings. Some may be surprised with how things end up. But one thing's for sure: A good time will be had by all.

Dr. Lynn Clark Callister
BYU Professor of Nursing

Professor Lynn Clark Callister earned her bachelor's degree in nursing from BYU, her master's degree in maternal/child nursing from Wichita State University, and her PhD in parent/child nursing from the University of Utah. In 1988 she joined the faculty at BYU, where she has been teaching women's health and maternal/newborn nursing. She currently serves as associate dean of curriculum in the College of Nursing.

Dr. Callister is also an adjunct professor in the College of Religious Education. She has received numerous awards in nursing education and for her research, which has focused on the cultural and spiritual meanings of childbirth. Her findings have been presented and published internationally.

Sister Callister has served as stake Relief Society president for nine years in the Kansas Wichita Stake and for over five years in the Provo Sharon East Stake. She has served in a variety of other Church callings, including on the advisory board for LDS Social Services and on the Kansas Commission on the Status of Women. She is currently a member of the General Women's Conference Committee.

Lynn and her husband, Reed, have a blended family of 11 children and 16 grandchildren.

IRA backs peace accord

Associated Press

DUBLIN, Ireland — Sinn Fein leader Gerry Adams said he's taking his IRA-allied party into "uncharted territory" after its landmark vote in support of the Northern Ireland peace accord.

Backed by 331 of the party's 350 delegates, Adams ended Sinn Fein's traditional boycott of the Northern Ireland government — a policy as old as the Protestant-majority state created 77 years ago.

"This was huge — a watershed," Adams said after Sunday's vote at the Royal Dublin Society hall.

The shift flies in the face of the Irish Republican Army's determination to see the British-ruled north unite with the rest of Ireland.

The IRA-allied Sinn Fein now is free to help govern Northern Ireland along with other parties in a new 108-seat Belfast Assembly to be elected June 25.

British Prime Minister Tony Blair, who is campaigning this week in Northern Ireland in favor of the referendum, admitted that his government has no alternative plan if Protestant voters reject compromise.

"Plan B is going back to square one," he said.

Sinn Fein is able to sell previously unpalatable compromise by pointing to the pain it's causing Protestant opponents. The Ulster Unionists, the major Protestant party, have suffered major defections to the "No" camp since accepting the deal last month.

The British and Irish governments combined to help Adams' sales pitch, too, highlighting the accord's promise to free several hundred IRA prisoners. Both governments released four IRA prisoners for the day to speak at the conference. In particular, the surprise appearance of the IRA's longest-serving prisoners — four men convicted in 1975 of several bombings in England — sent the hall into thunderous applause.

The modern "Provisional" IRA and Sinn Fein were born out of a bloody feud in 1969, and suffered another split in 1986 when Adams persuaded Sinn Fein to drop its boycott of the Irish parliament.

Breakaway IRA members determined to unravel the outlawed group's July 1997 truce made their first major statement on the eve of the vote.

They compared Adams and Sinn Fein chief negotiator Martin McGuinness to Michael Collins and Eamon de Valera, past IRA-Sinn Fein chiefs who reluctantly accepted Ireland's partition.

FDA wants to inspect all imported produce

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — More than one-third of all fresh fruit and 12 percent of vegetables consumed in America now come from overseas. But a study released Monday by Congress' investigative agency said the federal government is unable to ensure that imported foods are safe.

The findings by the General Accounting Office could boost President Clinton's efforts to strengthen the Food and Drug Administration's authority to require that other countries adopt safe practices for fruit, vegetables, fish and processed foods.

If Congress passed pending legislation giving FDA that authority — which the Agriculture Department already has for imported meat and poultry — it would "provide greater assurance that the imported foods it is responsible for are safe," the report said.

The study did not conclude that imported foods are more dangerous than those produced domestically, but imports grew more than 50 percent since 1990 to reach some $33 billion

There have been some high-profile incidents of illness from imported foods, including Guatemalan raspberries, Mexican cantaloupes and alfalfa sprouts from the Netherlands.

Sen. Susan Collins, R-Maine, who requested the GAO report as chairwoman of the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, said today the findings are "a serious indictment" of FDA inspection systems and promised four in-depth hearings this year to examine the problem.

"We have an obligation to look at the system and fix it," she told reporters.

As for increasing the FDA's authority to check practices in foreign countries, Collins said, "I think we should consider it."

FDA spokeswoman Lorrie McHugh said the agency has "long recognized" it needs greater resources with the sharp increase in imports and "hopes that this report is a catalyst for congressional action."

The study found that the FDA's reliance on port-of-entry inspections meant that only 46,395, or 1.7 percent, of more than 2.7 million imported food shipments in 1997 were actually checked by an inspector. Of those, only 16,000 underwent a laboratory analysis for disease-causing organisms or other problems.

The Agriculture Department, on the other hand, visually checked every shipment and did inspections on about 20 percent of 118,000 meat and poultry imports. In addition, USDA officials visited 30 countries and checked 336 foreign plants to ensure their safety practices were equal to those in this country.

In a written response to the audit, FDA Associate Commissioner Diane Thompson said the agency is seeking congressional approval for authority to check foreign practices. But to prevent disruptions in foreign trade, Thompson said they should not be a requirement for all imported foods.

"Such a requirement could have the undesirable effect of forcing FDA to bar entry to imports from most of the world" until each country's practices were certified, she wrote.

U.S. stamp price to increase by 1¢

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Despite three years of billion-dollar mail profits, the independent Postal Rate Commission Monday reluctantly agreed to a post office request to raise the price of stamps by a penny.

The increase could take place later this summer, although the commission urged that it be held off at least until January.

The boost to 33 cents in the cost of sending a greeting card or paying a bill is the most obvious portion of the rate increase. But complex changes also affect other rates for mailing packages, magazines and newspapers, advertising mail and for such services as post office boxes, certified and registered mail and insurance.

The commission chided the Postal Service for not delaying its request in order to provide more up-to-date information on costs and expenses.

The commission rejected a request to raise the price of sending post cards by a penny, keeping them at 20 cents.

The commission recommended cutting the price of heavier letters by reducing the price for each extra ounce from 23 cents to 22 cents.

On other rates, the commission recommended a 12.3 percent increase for parcel post, somewhat more than the 9.2 percent asked by the post office. For periodicals, the post office wanted a 3.9 percent boost, but the commission recommended 4.6 percent.

Advertising mail rates asked by the post office were reduced by about one-third by the commission. The commission also sharply cut the proposed increase in book rates.

"These changes will provide added funds to enable the Postal Service to proceed with its plans to spend $5.6 billion on equipment and service enhancement programs in the 1998 fiscal year," the commission said.

Postal officials said with labor negotiations coming up this fall, transportation costs rising and the need for investment in new buildings and equipment they foresee going back into the red unless they can charge more.

The current 32-cent price to mail a first-class letter took effect Jan. 1, 1995, following a year in which the mail agency lost nearly $1 billion.

In the three fiscal years since then, the Postal Service has reported profits of $1.8 billion, $1.6 billion and $1.3 billion, which have helped reduce — but not eliminate — debts accumulated over decades of red ink.

"We want to avoid the mistakes made in the 1980s when we waited too long before raising rates," a top postal manager said last week.

"Then our million-dollar profits turned to billion-dollar losses," said the manager, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Chinese representatives visit BYU, Utah

Government representatives from China visited BYU and met with the First Presidency of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints Thursday to learn more about the LDS religion.

The Chinese officials are responsible for setting the country's domestic and foreign religious policy.

President Gordon B. Hinckley, along with the First Presidency, hosted the group in Salt Lake City after their BYU visit.

The group also toured Temple Square and Welfare Square and attended a special performance by the Tabernacle Choir.

They met with Gov. Mike Leavitt earlier that morning.

Paul Hyer, professor emeritus of Asian studies, said, "As China is opening to the world, they are realizing that the LDS religion is becoming more important."

Hyer, who is also a specialist in modern China, helped host the group which included Elder Chu-jen Chia, LDS Area Authority of Beijing, China.

The group's BYU visit included a stop at the Harold B. Lee Library where they viewed some rare photographs of China's earliest Communist leaders: Mao Tse-tung, Zhou Enlai and Zhu De.

The pictures were taken by Helen Foster Snow, a correspondent for China during its war with Japan from 1931 to 1945.

"Helen Foster Snow is a hero in China," Hyer said.

Snow's life provides a unique connection between China and the LDS culture.

After Snow passed away last January, her niece, Sheril Bischoff, donated over 400 boxes of manuscripts and personal papers to BYU.

Snow's concern for helping the Chinese is apparent in her writings.

As the Chinese study this historical figure, they have learned of Snow's Mormon pioneer roots that go back to Nauvoo and the trek west to Utah, Hyer said.

Snow was born in Cedar City in 1907. Her mother was an LDS Church Relief Society President and active community leader.

Her family was involved in the church's "United Order."

Snow's years in Utah as a leader and organizer where she arrived in 1932.

"Helen's lifestyle was that of a Latter-day Saint to Hyer.

After viewing Snow's work the officials were able to ask LDS and non-LDS students questions about their religious experiences.

"They were impressed with the appearance of the campus and that the Church had an impressive religious institution," said.

Thieves stump Orem police; laptops remain missing

Police are still looking for suspects in the burglary of three different Orem stores who have had laptops stolen from their display shelf during business hours.

"Office Max, CompUSA and Future Shop have all been hit," said Lt. Bob Conner of the Orem Police Department.

The two computers stolen from Office Max have a combined retail value of $3,400.

The laptop stolen from CompUSA has a retail value of $5,700, Conner said.

At Office Max the suspects disabled the security systems designed to protect the displays.

"Whoever these people are, they have a knowledge of our alarm systems," said David Luke, assistant manager of Office Max.

"They are obviously a skilled group of people. Somebody had to spend some time learning the system before they could walk in and do this," Luke said.

Management at Office Max believe more than one person participated in the theft.

"They obviously bring three or four people into the store to distract management and employees during the robbery or they would not have the opportunity," Luke said.

Although the thefts happened more than a week ago, police still do not have any suspects, Conner said.

The large number of customers coming into the stores make it difficult for investigators to identify suspects.

"There are hundreds of people touching the merchandise and the surrounding area," Luke said. "It is kind of hit or miss, you have to actually catch the person in the act."

CompUSA and Future Shop were not willing to discuss the incident.

These companies have policies that would not allow them to discuss the thefts.

Local managers do not want to reveal information about the security systems of their stores, Luke said.

Food Drive successful with help of Postal carriers

By ALLISON WOOLLEY
allison@du2.byu.edu
Universe Staff Writer

Postal carriers are still collecting food for their fifth-annual national food drive to fill food banks across the country.

The official National Letter Carriers Food Drive is held the second Saturday of May.

Gov. Michael Leavitt designated May 9 as Utah Letter Carriers Food-Drive Day.

Those who found out about the food drive late can still leave non-perishable food items by their mailbox, and postal carriers will pick them up and deliver the food to local food banks.

Ron Lyons, the acting supervisor of the Provo Post Office, said, "People will donate ... around the holidays, then it slacks off in the summertime, and there is no food in the food banks."

Campbells Soup sponsored the food drive this year by paying for fliers to be distributed to homes across the nation. People were asked to leave non-perishable foods near their mailbox for their letter carrier to pick up last Saturday.

The letter carriers worked on a voluntary basis and received no extra pay for picking up the food and delivering it to their local food bank. The state of Utah will also reimburse the food banks for the sales tax on every pound of food they receive.

"The food drive is a wake-up call to the public that, yes, we do have an evil, and it's hunger," said Michael Lester, AFL-CIO community service director. Lester said one out of three people is at risk for hunger.

Beverly Burge, customer coordinator for the Salt Lake City Office, said that most of the food received by kids and the poor.

Volunteers joined with carriers after the food was delivered. Some families who are receiving the donations help with the

"The most rewarding part is when you go down to the food bank and see the people that are hungry. That food is there unloved food," said Dave Danner, president of the Letter Carriers Provo. "The smiles on their faces makes it worthwhile."

The Provo Post Office has collected more than 70,000 pounds of food, double what they received last year, said Cary McFarland, Office shop steward.

Whale meat samples stir debate

Associated Press

Taking surreptitious samples from sushi restaurants and supermarket freezers, two sleuthing New Zealand scientists have uncovered strong evidence of an international black market in whale meat in Japan and South Korea.

Tests conducted by the Auckland University researchers revealed that a wide variety of whale meat is still on sale, despite a 12-year-old international moratorium on whale hunting.

A piece of meat from a Japanese fish market, for example, was found to be from a type of humpback whale found only in Mexican coastal waters.

"How can a Mexican whale turn up on a Japanese dinner plate? There is no evidence Mexican whales ever migrate into Japanese waters," said one of the scientists, Gina Lento.

The scientists also found southern hemisphere sei whale, Bryde's whale, North Pacific minke, fin and blue whale meat on sale in Japanese markets, up to 30 years after they were protected from hunting.

Japan is the only country exempted from the 1986 International Whaling Commission moratorium on whale hunting, but is restricted to hunting only for research. Meat from the whales killed for this purpose often is sold at fish markets, however.

Norway also holds an annual hunt, in defiance of the moratorium.

South Korea has no research hunting permits, and whale meat can be sold legally in markets only if caught accidentally on the coast along with legal fish.

The scientists' work bolsters claims by conservation groups, independent researchers and some governments that there is a growing international trade in illegal whale meat.

Their report, delivered to the Whaling Commission's scientific committee last week, will go to the full commission in Oman this week.

The report says there is a "surprising diversity" of whale meat in commercial markets, some of which is of questionable legality.

"The evidence is strongly circumstantial at present, the smoking gun, if you will," Lento told The Associated Press.

Old 737s grounded due to faulty wires

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — When Boeing designed the 737 in the late 1960s, it figured fuel pump wires could last a lifetime if they were coated with Teflon and sealed in a metal tube. The government agreed and did not require inspections after the planes rolled off the assembly line.

Now, 30 years later, reports of frayed wires and punctured tubes have disproved the initial assumptions. The Federal Aviation Administration ordered the oldest 737s grounded until emergency inspections can be completed.

The initial results were not heartening: Of the 142 fuel pump tubes inspected on 71 planes by Monday afternoon, half showed signs of wire abrasion and electrical sparking. Each plane has two fuel pump tubes. The impact on travelers was minimal, however.

Continental Airlines had to cancel about a dozen flights Monday as the first of its inspections were begun, but that was less than 1 percent of the airline's 2,000 daily flights.

Critics say authorities have long ignored wiring problems in civilian and military aircraft, which could cause problems as benign as a flickering reading light to as serious as a fuel tank explosion such as the one suspected in the crash of TWA Flight 800.

The FAA said that wasn't the reason for the explosion, although it admits that it has worked to better understand the wiring around fuel tanks since the TWA accident in July 1996. By the end of this summer, the agency also plans to initiate a comprehensive inspection program for all of the operating systems on older aircraft.

"One of the things you can't do when you engineer a new airplane is guess everything about it," said Michael Barr, a former Air Force fighter pilot who now heads the aviation safety program at the University of Southern California. "You need an airplane to actually fly and accumulate a lot of hours before you learn all of the potential problems."

Barr said the oldest 737s have reached that point, and changes and additions to the inspection regimen are now necessary.

The Boeing 737 is the most widely used commercial airliner, with more than 2,700 registered worldwide.

On Sunday, the FAA grounded 179 original Boeing 737 models, the 737-100 and -200 series, after an inspection of a United Airlines plane found bare wires and signs of electrical sparking in the fuel-pump tubing.

Officials were concerned that a mixture of air, fuel and electricity could cause a fire or explosion. They ordered the emergency inspections and repairs that included wrapping more Teflon around the wiring or replacing the bundles and metal tubes altogether.

The Project on Government Oversight, the watchdog group that has popularized such Pentagon abuses as the $7,600 coffee maker, issued a report on May 4 highlighting instances of wiring problems in military and commercial planes.

In the case of the commercial transports such as the Boeing 747, the group said it found instances when faulty wiring caused the autopilot to malfunction. The organization urged the FAA to review aircraft wiring and said military and civilian officials should share their findings.

"We're not suggesting that every aircraft should be grounded tomorrow," said Marcus Corbin, a defense specialist for the group. "But we think this is a problem that hasn't gotten the attention it needs yet."

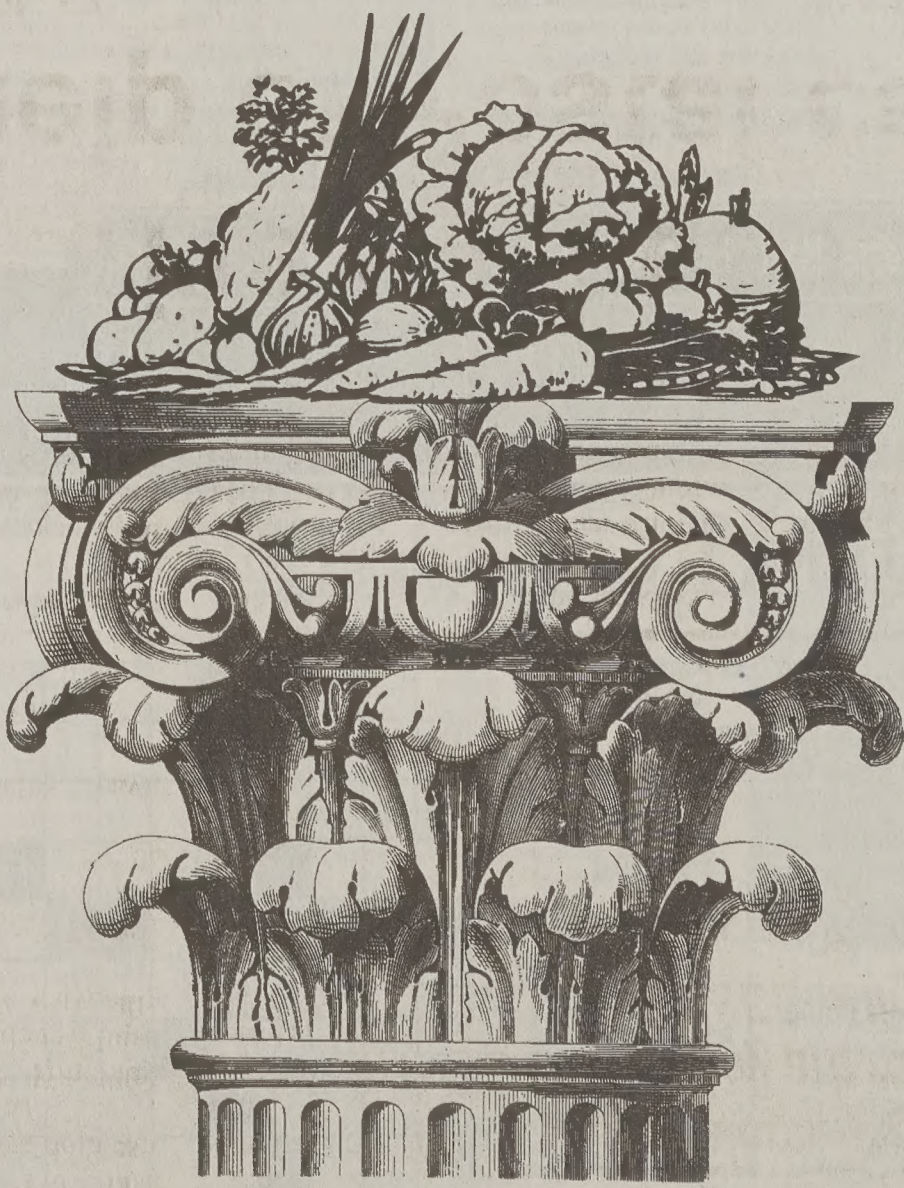

The FAA said such a review is part of a new plan to inspect all operating systems in older aircraft. The agency has already developed a program for inspecting the construction of older aircraft.

"The goal will be to have a program that will provide appropriate safety for aircraft and their systems regardless of how long they operate those aircraft," said Thomas McSweeney, the FAA's aircraft certification director.

Barr said that while that program is needed, recent events have shown that the existing safety system works as intended.

"The accident investigator who suspected a problem seems to have talked to the FAA, who required the inspection which detected the problems that are now being fixed," he said.
